On Friday night of this year's Berlin Art Week, galleries take center stage. Starting from 6 p.m. until 10 p.m., the fifty galleries regularly participating in Gallery Weekend Berlin will open their doors to the public.

Konrad Fischer Galerie presents new works by Belgian artist Edith Dekyndt. Opening with a performance, the exhibition sees Dekyndt use her "Animal Methods" in an analysis of toxic substances from flora and fauna, exploring among other things the intersection of beauty and disgust. Meanwhile, at Nordenhake, Iñaki Bonillas' series "Horizons of the Possible" examines the extent to which film stills can become stand-alone images. During Gallery Night, Bonillas will host a discussion about his creative process. ChertLüdde will feature its first exhibition of Bosnian Herzegovinian artist Selma Selman, who will also be doing a reading and performance on Friday evening. In "Ophelia's Awakening", the artist transforms the gallery space into a junkyard of car parts and old household appliances, confronting themes of discrimination, violence, sexism, and patriarchy.

Back to Mitte, a John Baldessari exhibition at Sprüth Magers offers a journey into the past. In 1992, the artist spent time in Ahmedabad, India, at the invitation of an industrialist family. The experience inspired the series "Ahmedabad 1992", which offers a view of India in the 1990s from the perspective of an American guest. Crone is showing its first presentation of works by Christoph Schlingensiefel after his death 14 years ago. What would the fearless provocateur and performance artist have to say about today's political status quo? "Deutschlandsuche" takes its title from Schlingensiefel's 1999 journey across Germany in search of a successor to "Siegfried"— or a new German hero. The show includes three of his major works and new, previously unpublished material.

KOW, which has relocated from Lindenstraße to Kurfürstenstraße 145, is celebrating both the opening of its new space and its 15th anniversary. "Vulnerable", a group exhibition with artists from the gallery's program, will be their inaugural exhibition. In the vicinity of young galleries such as Heidi and Molitor as well established galleries Galerie Thomas Schulte is also opening a second location in the Mercator Höfe (Potsdamer Straße). On view will be new paintings by German-Chilean artist Cosima zu Knyphausen, showing with the gallery for the first time. At Schulte's original location on Charlottenstraße is a survey show of Rebecca Horn's work from the past 25 years, alongside Allan McCollum's "The World: A Moment in Time", a large-scale work that revisits and extends his 20-year-old installation "Each and Every One of You".

In addition, the galleries will be open to Berlin Art Week visitors on Saturday from 12 to 6 pm and Sunday from 11 am to 6 pm.
